III. PROCEDURES

- A. Receiving the call of an active threat:
1. Communications Operators upon receiving a call of a potential or actual active threat situation shall communicate this information to officers as soon as practical. Communications operators will attempt to relay exact location of the incident, number of suspects involved, description of suspects involved, type of weapons involved, and any additional pertinent information.
 2. Officers shall recognize that immediate action is necessary during an active threat situation because innocent people are in grave peril until the suspect or suspects voluntarily surrender or are forced to surrender. (46.1.10 c)
 3. Departmental personnel shall respond to active threat situations following departmental standard operating guidelines and as outlined in related training courses. Further, Officers shall assist other responding units as outlined in policy and procedure in addition to jurisdictional and mutual aid agreements. (46.1.10 b)
- B. Response
1. Active threat situations may be dispatched as shots fired, disturbance with weapons, and/or similar call. Such calls may or may not be active threat situations as defined in this policy. Supervisors and Officers shall utilize all information available to them at the time to determine appropriate response to the situation.
 2. While officers are responding to the incident, the shift supervisor shall coordinate with the communications operator to ensure that appropriate notifications as outlined in SOG 5-01 Incident Notification Requirements are being completed. These notifications are done to ensure proper timely notification of the public and to request additional public safety departments and other resources. (46.1.10 a, b)
 3. During any active threat situation, a shift supervisor or command-level officer may request through Emergency Communications or through the use of shared radio channels a "Mutual Aid Request" which is a term used to communicate a request that any and all available agencies and officers respond to the location of the active threat situation. (46.1.10 b)
 4. During active threat situations, medical personnel should stage in a safe location away from the known incident and await further instructions. The communications operator shall relay the last known location of the suspect or suspects to joint communications so medical personnel can make appropriate decisions on where to stage for the incident.

5. The primary objective, of the first responding officers, is to stop the active threat situation by immediately responding to the threat and either accepting voluntary surrender or forcing involuntary surrender of all involved suspects.
6. Officers should attempt to enter a facility with a minimum of two other officers; however, officers may enter alone or with another officer if such action may help save lives and/or as outlined in related training.
7. Responding officers shall notify communications of their anticipated entry point if practicable and request this information be relayed to responding personnel.
8. Once in a facility, officers shall attempt to determine:
 - a) The location of the suspect(s);
 - b) A description of the suspect(s),
 - c) The type(s) of weapons being used, and
 - d) Any other information that may assist additional responding officers maintains their safety or locate suspects.
9. Officers shall relay available information to Communications when practical.
10. Until the threat of further harm has been eliminated, officers shall bypass injured victims, suspected explosive devices, and rooms with locked doors, unless the threat is perceived to be within such a room.
11. Upon encountering a suspect, officers shall either accept the suspect's voluntary surrender, or force the suspect's involuntary surrender as appropriate.
12. Once officers have achieved their primary objective they shall coordinate with the Incident Commander to get medical attention to any injured parties, secure any explosive or dangerous devices, and secure the crime scene.
13. If the suspect(s) become contained in an area where no additional victims can be generated, Officers shall establish a perimeter and ensure that the suspect is unable to escape or access any additional victims. Officers shall then follow departmental SOG 10-12 Hostage & Barricaded Persons. (46.1.10 d)
14. If the suspect(s) become contained in an area with access to additional victims or hostages, immediate action may be necessary to stop the suspects, despite the obvious increased risk to officers.
15. In active threats, it may be beneficial for members of the community to shelter in place, evacuate an area, stay away from certain areas, and similar actions to help contain a situation or provide for safety. The department will use the appropriate notification systems in place to relay that information to the community and those in the affected area. Additional information on notification systems is outlined in SOG 10-06 Unusual Occurrences. (46.1.10 d)

C. Incident Command and Incident Commander

1. The shift supervisor should, if practical, assume command of the operation as the Incident Commander and set up a field command post as outlined in SOG 10-06 Unusual Occurrences. As soon as practical the Incident Commander shall request additional resources and make appropriate notifications as outlined in SOG 10-06 Unusual Occurrences

2. If additional Command Staff are available, they shall assume the role of Incident Commander and the shift supervisor shall assume the role of Operations Function unless directed otherwise by the Incident Commander.
